FACILITATOR

The Article: Reading Copy

Read aloud at 2:36. Fill the yellow brackets from each team's ledger. Read both teams' statements if they differ.

Raised Close, Packed Far: A Beloved Delaware Supplier Is Reselling Industrial Meat and Seafood as "Local"

By Jo Alvarez · The Delmarva Dispatch · 5:00 PM

For at least 14 months, Brandywine Heritage Farms & Fisheries, the Sussex County supplier whose name appears on the menus of Bleu Hen Hospitality Group, has been repackaging poultry and pork from large out-of-state processors and selling it as "pasture-raised" and "local," according to a former Brandywine plant manager, two current employees and shipping records reviewed by the Dispatch.

The former plant manager estimates roughly half of Brandywine's volume now comes from outside the region. Plant codes found under Brandywine labels at Bleu Hen's Riverfront kitchen trace to facilities in North Carolina and Pennsylvania.

Brandywine founder Calvin Teague called the claims "false and malicious." Pressed on the plant codes Thursday, he acknowledged "limited co-packing at peak harvest" but said "everything is still from our farms."

Bleu Hen's response, on the record: [INSERT EACH TEAM'S ON-RECORD STATEMENT, VERBATIM]

[IF THE STATEMENT CLAIMS THE GROUP HAD NO PRIOR WARNING:] A sous chef at the Riverfront kitchen told the Dispatch she photographed a second label on a delivery box on Tuesday and sent it to her chef. "I told them," she said.

[IF THE STATEMENT DECLINES TO COMMENT:] Bleu Hen declined to comment on the record.

[IF THE GROUP SCRUBBED "LOCAL" FROM ITS SITE:] Web archive records show Bleu Hen's website changed the word "local" to "seasonal" on its menus this afternoon.

Bleu Hen's menus promise every dish is "raised, grown or caught within 75 miles of your table."